

Miguel Caballero

“El macho antirretroviral”

Open Lecture

This talk aims to deconstruct notions of undetectability in HIV-positive gay men and PrEP use in HIV-negative gay men, and investigate new patterns of masculinity and normalization mediated by antiretroviral treatment. It traces comparisons with the birth control pill for women, in order to question these "pharmacological liberations".

Talk will be given in Spanish

Monday, October 17
2:30 pm to 3:50 pm
Earth & Space Sciences 183

Miguel Caballero is an HIV-positive PhD candidate at Princeton University, activist and writer for the blog ASS (Amor, Sexo y Serología) and HIV Equal.

Sponsored by the Department of Hispanic Languages and Literature