

The Center for India Studies

presents

Fall 2010 Lecture Series:

Indo-US Relations: Obama Visit and After

Ambassador Harsh Bhasin

Saturday, 13 November, 2010, 3 pm

Charles B. Wang Center

President Obama's current visit to India has variously been described as "historic", "path breaking" and a "defining moment" in U.S.-India relations. Just now, we can hardly tell whether, which or all of these will prove to be true. What can, however, be said for sure is that the visit takes place in the backdrop of growing Chinese political, economic and military assertiveness, the unabated threat of terrorism and mounting economic crises. Thanks to the unique efforts of the last two US Presidents, the bilateral relationship has already acquired strong strategic overtones. Where will Obama take it next?

Ambassador Harsh Bhasin

Ambassador Harsh Bhasin is Chair of Stony Brook's Department of Asian & Asian-American Studies, and a former diplomat who served in the U.S. for nearly eight years. He is author of The Big Three: The Emerging Relationship Between The United States, India And China In The Changing World Order.

Co-sponsored by: Department of Asian & Asian American Studies and the Charles B. Wang Center

For information call the Center for India Studies at (631) 632-9742 or e-mail indiastudies@stonybrook.edu. Visit www.stonybrook.edu/india
For a disability-related accommodation, please call (631) 632-1941.

Lecture is free and open to the public. All are invited.

